burn railroad rate bill. The rate debate was opened by Mr. Clayton, of Alabama. Instead of its being a new thing, he declared the legislative regulation of interstate commerce to be as old as the common law. The States have always exercised this power to the fullest extent. Congress, he said, has the same plenary power over interstate commerce and ought to exercise it in restraint of the railroads and for the benefit of the public. The necessity for the legislation is brought about by the unjust discriminations of the roads 'hrough rebates and terminal charges.

Mr. Clayton maintained that the Elkins law preventing rebates could not be enforced without an esplonage, which was un-American, and that the present bill would make it possible to obtain information without resort to the spy system, because the books of railroad corporations would be open to the agents of the commission.

"Whether it be communism, anarchy or

Payment by Mr. Ryan of the income tax upon his Equitable holdings alone, amounting to $2.500.000, would more than double the revenues of the county.

And now enters prominently the question of the lincome tax. The State of Virginia now imposes a tax of 1 per cent. Upon all incomes. It was brought out in the debate yesterday that certain menicome tax of their own. Particular reference was had, though no names were called, to Staunton, which is the only known city which has a local income tax, and there the local tax is considerably higher than the State tax. Residents of the state from the State deducts $34 income tax, and there the local tax is considerably higher than the State tax. Residents of the state over $3,500. The judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals resident therefore receives from the State and the state over $3,500. "Whether it be communism, anarchy or not, the time will come when the people will rise up and follow William J. Bryan to victory." This was the opening prediction of Mr. Henry, of Texas, who followed Mr. Clayton for the bill. He was replying to Mr. Sibley's recent characterization of the pending bill. The maximum rate raise, he said, settled affirmatively the constitutionality of granting the power to fix rates. He regretted the president's change of attitude on the guestion. "I believe in his honesty and sincerity," he said, "but wish he had adhered to his original intention to give power to establish a reasonable rate and had left the question of the maximum rate out of consideration."

Mr. Esche, of Wisconsin, explained how the bill was broad enough to include the regulation of express companies.

Mr. Kennedy, of Ohlo, presented an argument to contradict the claim that he control of railways was interfering with private property.

The Income Tax.

The Income Tax.

This is the Nelson story, as it is caught up here and there, and whether so far as results are considered it prove fiction or fact, it is interesting in a rare degree. The income tax question as a whole, in fact, is interesting. A question as to the status of a local income tax under the Constitution was raised in the legislative lobbies yesterday. One of the most able constitutional lawyers in the General Assembly, without having studied the matter profoundly expressed the opinion that the local tax did not violate the Constitution. The only reference made in the Constitution to the matter of income taxes is in these words:

It is argued by the advocates of the bill exempting judges, that after having bill exempting judges, that after having the taxes deducted, they do not receive the salaries absolutely required by the constitution. On the other side it is contended that to exempt them from taxation would be to create a class distinction and to attack a fundamental principle of the organic law. The constitutional question is thus exploded from both ends. The debate will be continued to-morrow.

Mr. Christian, associated with Mr. Anderson in representing Major Dooley, & clares that there should be an investigation at once and that the court should take cognizance of the charge made.

Mr. Meredith again replied that there had been no charge made, that he had only said what was a general rumor.

I have not said that any county official used or received any money, for I do not know—nor that any councilman received or used any. I say that there was a rumor on the street that money had been used—whether, in working or stiring up sentiment or otherwise, I did not know. It was all over within ten minutes, but while it lasted there was a distinct sensation in the courtroom. Mr. Cannon resumed his testimony and said in substance that the line drawn on the map showing what territory was proposed to be annexed was the result of a compromise, some half a dozen or name maps having been drawn by the committee of the Council before the matter was finally decided.

Mr. Cannon made a strong witness for the city, it had given the question of annexation a great deal of study and was prepared to state positively that expansion was absolutely necessary for the city at this time.

No Manufacturing Sites

He depied that there were any desirable manufacturing sites in the city and said that he had been impressed with the fact that many firms had moved from the city and others had refused to locate here simply because there were no facilities to be had within the city limits. Mr. Cannon, in answer to a question from Mr. Pollard, said that with the extending of the city limits, rents would, if they didn't decrease, certainly remain at the present figure, and that if the city remained in its present congested condition, with a few thousand more of people the increase in rents would be the inevitable result. The city at this time, he said, was fully able to take in all of the territory proposed and was in a position to take in even more than was planned in the ordinance. In fact, he had favored the taking in of much additional territory that that included in this ordinance now under discussion.

He was taken in hand by Mr. Wen-Richmond and the necessity for averexation. He was taken in hand by Mr. Wendenburg for the country and questioned regarding the report of the gas expert in Richmond. The Mayor answered that the gas works here was on a par with the works in Washington, and that the only trouble here was in the supply pipes. He was asked by Judge Nicol how the annexed territory would be policed, and replied that there would be mounted police. Five mounted policemen can patrol this territory better than the country has ever done or ever can, "said the captain." The city is able to issue more bonds to-day than every department can spend," declared the Mayor.

The criticism of the water supply was unjust and came from mrn who were interested in the sale of the plant to some corporation, testified the Mayor. He said that there had been a persistent effort for years to wreat the control of the waterworks from the city.
